CANADA AND THE COPYRIGHT

MR. BRETT SAYS A CLIQUE OF CANADIAN PRINTERS IS BEHIND THE PRES-ENT ACT.

IS THE ACT VALID BEFORE IT HAS REACHED THE

the faintest shadow of sincerity in the Toronto crowd who are clamoring for a specific law of copyright for Canada alone and independent of the Home Government, they are a unit on another en paid by the British Government officials to the "great cry," unmindful of what a small quantity of "wool" lies back of it for marketing. This is the vulnerable point in the situation across the Northern border, if Mr. Chamberlain especially will so understand it. Possibly no one in this country connected with the business of publishing oks has a wider knowledge of all phases of the various issues, and they are many, than has Mr. Brett, of Macmillan & Co. He was ready to discuss a question upon which he has spent much study. In all that has been produced regarding the situation he said he had not as yet seen anything that seemed to him to reach the germ of the issue.

seemed to him to reach the germ of the issue.
"I can," he remarked with much earnestness,
"count on the fingers of one hand the clique of Canadian printers who are behind this law. In fact, I believe I could almost name them, and all the agitation is nothing more than the work of a clique. I was in Toronto for a number of years and am thoroughly conversant with the situation there, and feel that I am consequently more or less competent to speak."

The trouble is that officials whose tenure of office depends upon a nation which enjoys the privilege of an elective franchise too often exaggerate the cry of a few into a demand of their entire con-This, he held, has been the trouble in She has ever been arrayed in opposition to a reciprocal copyright agreement. Even before the International Copyright bill became a law Australia was acting in harmony with the Home Government under a copyright agreement which made punishable the sale of pirated books. When made punishable the sale of parts ago he said he on a visit to Australia some years ago he said he found books on the shelves of some of the booksellers which came under the prohibitory act, and he did not hesitate to point them out. They were promptly removed from the shelves, and the sellers expressed their thanks for the information, as they would have been heavily liable if put to an investigation.

Mr. Brett also raised the question during the versation whether the measure as adopted by the Dominion Government is valid before it shall have received the sanction of the English Parliament. He said he had been told by a man whose discretion he would be slow to question that such is the case and if this be so, he felt there was no need of inlulging in unrestful speculation as to the ultimate to secure the passage of a law in this country, and I can tell you that it will require twice as long to get the British Parliament to sanction an act such as the Canadian Parliament has passed. In case it was done of course the effort of Canada would then be to make it retroactive, that is, to make it of effect from the date of passage by the Canadian Parliament."

He could not see how it would be possible to prothe American market from the inroads of the pirated editions. The avenues of entrance are so many and of such various kinds as to render complete protection an impossibility. Of course, the dealer would take every studied advantage to cover his tracks. He could buy through secret agents and thus accumulate a large stock, and before the ma-chinery of the law could be set in motion to arrest ould have to be reached through his different would have to be reached through his different sources of supply. Then there are the postal routes to be protected and people are to be watched at every turn. He cited what he had himself seen on the steamers that ply on Lake Champlain, and it is what every traveller there can see if he will only look. It was a rare thing to find a passenger who had not in his travelling bag or in his pocket or some place about him a copy of a pirated book, and generally one by an American author.

Robert Underwood Johnson, the secretary of the American Copyright League, was in the citry recently, and was found in the office of the Century Company. Said he:

"Let me suggest that what Mr. Ford proposes in his London letter to The Tribune as a method of forcing a rejection of the Canadian copyright has already been done."

Looking over his correspondence, Mr. Johnson found that as long ago as June 7 of last year he had written to Secretary Gresham on the subject, and on the 16th of the same month he had received a response from the Secretary informing him that Mr. Bayard had been instructed to take suitable actior. What action was actually taken Mr. Johnson was not in a position to say. In speaking further on the question he said it was not so much a question of copyright as it is of the relations of Canada to the British Empire. This act of the Dominion Government, he contended, simply legalizes piracy. "In our worst days," he continued, "we never gave anybody letters of marque to prey upon the literature of another country, although, of course, it was done."
